SPECIAL PROGRAMS FOR INDIGENOUS PEOPLE

The BCOHRC recognizes that Indigenous peoples in Canada face pre-existing disadvantage arising out of a legacy of colonialism, including the inter-generational trauma associated with residential schools. Indigenous peoples in Canada continue to have lower educational and economic achievements than non-Indigenous people in Canada, as well as poorer health outcomes and increased risk of violence.

In 2015, Canada's Truth and Reconciliation Commission studied this legacy of disadvantage and made a number of calls to action to begin the necessary process of reconciliation. The Commission called for greater Indigenous representation, and better cultural competence, in the education, health, justice and child welfare sectors, as well as other aspects of public life.

- Education: The Truth and Reconciliation Commission as well as the B.C. Ministry of Education have recognized the need to work with Indigenous communities to improve school success for Indigenous learners in B.C. Part of this process entails the development of culturally appropriate curricula, and increasing knowledge of and respect for Indigenous culture, language and history. Indigenous leaders and role models are a vital part of connecting Indigenous learners to their school and strengthening ties to Indigenous communities.
- Health: Indigenous peoples face serious and unique health challenges. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission has called upon governments to increase the numbers of Indigenous professionals working in the healthcare field and to ensure healthcare is delivered to Indigenous people in a culturally-competent manner.
- Safety: Indigenous people, and in particular Indigenous women, are disproportionately victims of crime. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission recommends culturally-appropriate services for Indigenous victims of crime.
- Child welfare: Indigenous children are over-represented in out-of-home care, and are more likely to intersect with the child welfare system than non-Indigenous children. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission recommends culturally competent training for social workers and others in the child welfare system.

Special programs in B.C. which aim to ameliorate the disadvantage faced by Indigenous communities, including those consistent with the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's recommendations, will be approved by the BCOHRC under s. 42(3) of the B.C. Human Rights Code.
