Advisory: Upcoming B.C. Human Rights Code public educational session on services

Vancouver B.C. – On October 19, 2022, BC's Office of the Human Rights Commissioner will hold a free, virtual session to help people understand B.C.'s Human Rights Code and how it can help address discrimination, with a specific focus on services that are usually available to the public.

The Code protects against discrimination in relation to employment, housing and services in B.C. This includes hotels, stores, restaurants, schools, libraries, campgrounds and government and community programs.

Every person has the right to be free from discrimination whether they are providing or receiving such a service in British Columbia. This 90-minute interactive session will help participants learn about their rights and responsibilities in this area.

By the end of this session, learners will be able to:

- Identify discrimination under B.C.'s Human Rights Code
- Recognize terms used in the B.C. human rights system
- Recognize what kinds of discrimination can form the basis of a human rights complaint (including on the basis of race, ancestry, Indigenous identity, place of origin, sex, gender identity, disability, age and religion)

About the Commissioner

B.C.'s Human Rights Commissioner, Kasari Govender, started her five-year term on Sept. 3, 2019. Since then, our Office has been working swiftly to build a strong team, to listen deeply to the concerns of British Columbians, to deliver education materials on our rights and responsibilities, to issue policy guidance to protect marginalized communities and to lay a human rights-based foundation for our work. As an independent officer of the Legislature, the Commissioner is uniquely positioned to ensure human rights in B.C. are protected, respected and advanced on a systemic level throughout our society.
